City Council Weekly Information

Staff received a question about the design of two new pedestrian signals. Why are the signal being designed as standard pedestrian signals instead of hybrid pedestrian beacons?

There are 21 pedestrian traffic signals in Tempe. Three are pedestrian hybrid beacons and 18 are standard pedestrian signals. Both are signalized crossings that improve pedestrian safety as compared to an unsignalized crossing. However, using a standard pedestrian signal is consistent with the majority of pedestrian crossings in Tempe. Staff feels that the standard pedestrian signal is universally understood by a greater cross section of drivers. Additional details are provided below.

A standard pedestrian signal has redyellow-green signal indications. The green is lit for vehicle traffic on the main street until a pedestrian or bicyclist pushes the button. The constant illumination of the signal leads to an awareness of the location from the drivers, whereas a pedestrian hybrid beacon remains dark until activated.

For the most part, the signals operate with the same responsiveness. The majority of the pedestrian signals run "free", which means they are not in coordination with the adjacent signals. This means that the signal does not have to wait for a certain point in the cycle to change. Rather it begins to change immediately when the button is pushed, as long as the vehicle traffic has reached its minimum green time. For those pedestrian intersections that are coordinated, the cycle lengths are often much shorter than the adjacent signals to facilitate shorter wait times for pedestrians.

With the standard pedestrian signal, there is a clear understanding by drivers of stop on red and proceed on green. With the HAWK, the drivers stop on red and wait. At this point, the vehicular signal heads change to display an alternating flashing red. Vehicles must yield to any pedestrians still in the crosswalk. If the crosswalk is clear they may proceed after coming to a full stop. Every driver is required to stop at the stop bar before proceeding. There is some concern that all drivers do not stop during the flashing red operation. It has been observed that as the queue dissipates, drivers behind the lead vehicle continue through the crossing without stopping.

Also with a standard pedestrian signal, the user right of way is clearly defined and separated by movement. With the HAWK, the vehicles can proceed during the flashing red and the pedestrians can proceed at the same time during the WALK countdown. While this hasn't resulted in a crash trend, this can create confusion and unintended conflicts.

COMMUNITY SERVICES UPDATE

Open House at Historic Elias-Rodriguez House

On Saturday, November 18, excited community members experienced something special: free access to historic Elias-Rodriguez House and its surprisingly lush surroundings. Visits to this evocative adobe home will now be part of the museum's regular slate of historic house events. Elias-Rodriguez House is tucked away in one of the most historically rich areas of the city, just east of Rural Road on Old Eighth Street. This house reveals Tempe's vibrant Mexican heritage and highlights the independent, entrepreneurial women on whom the community depended.

Fifty people stopped by the open house to learn about this significant property. Several people remembered playing in Elias-Rodriguez House as children. Many had stories about nearby businesses, like the Sun Club bar and the Creamery Complex. Some guests stayed for two hours, chatting with museum volunteers and staff, reminiscing with each other, and wandering among the new generation of fruit trees and grapevines adorning the yard. Everyone enjoyed the sense of community that historic houses so beautifully support.

Elias-Rodriguez House (con't)

Sotelo Addition--later known as the La Neighborhood—was carved out of Manuela Sotelo's homestead. Vicente Elias bought a lot around 1890 and built a one-room structure to house himself, his wife Inez, and their first three children. The house grew along with the family: soon there were four sturdy rooms and eight siblings. Inez took advantage of her busy surroundings with a variety of ventures to support her family and neighbors. She cooked food for workers while they installed a railroad across the street, started a roadside business as Eighth Street became a state highway, and avidly cultivated plants on her property for food, medicine, and the simple beauty of their flowers. Her daughter Irene Rodriguez followed Inez's example as she raised her own children in the family home.
